Does my child support responsibility go away while I am in prison?

No. Your child support payments are due every month even if you are in prison or in jail.

If you cannot pay, your support debt continues to get bigger each month unless you change the order.

What happens to the 20% deducted from the money going into my inmate account?

Washington State law requires that the Department of Corrections (DOC) take money for child support from earnings, gratuities, and workers compensation benefits paid out to you. The money they take is sent once a month to the Division of Child Support (DCS) to apply to your child support cases. If we receive more than you owe the extra will be refunded back to your inmate account.

What can I do?

By completing the form in this brochure and mailing it to us, you can ask DCS to:

- Review your child support order to lower the current support payments. This may modify your support order. If you do not have a case with DCS, you can apply for our services.
- Lower or write-off the portion of your child support debt that is owed to the state of Washington. This process is called a Conference Board.
- Send you an application for services. We establish paternity, and establish, modify, and enforce orders for child support and health insurance.
- Release our hold on your driver license.

DCS does not provide visitation, custody, or parenting plan services.

How can changing (modifying) my order help me?

Child support should be set to reflect your current situation. If you want to change the amount your are charged for current support you have to modify your child support order.

- Changing your current support won't change how much debt you already owe.
- It doesn't happen automatically, you have to fill out paperwork and ask for it to change. It can take months to modify an order and you have to work with us the whole time to make it happen.
- The new order sets the start date of the change. The start date cannot be a date before you make your request to DCS, and may be later. You should make your request as soon as possible.

How can I change the amount I already owe?

Sometimes, depending on your total circumstances, DCS will consider forgiving some or all of a child support debt that is owed to the state of Washington. This happens during a process called a Conference Board.

The Conference Board Unit cannot forgive debt owed directly to someone else or another state. However, the person owed the child support debt can forgive the debt you owe them. If that is something they want to do they must contact DCS for more information.

What if I get a new notice?

DCS can serve you legal notices while you are in prison, including a notice to establish child support.

Do not ignore mail from DCS!

Usually, you have 20 days to answer the legal notices we send you. (Each notice has information about your rights.)

- If you object to the terms in the notice, you can ask us for relief.
- If you do not answer the notice it will automatically become final after 20 days pass and we will start to enforce it.

What about my driver license?

Let us know when you are in prison or work-release and we will release our hold on your driver license and keep it off until 30 days after you are released.

During those 30 days you need to contact us again to work out a payment plan. If you don't your license may be suspended again by child support. The sooner you call DCS the easier it will be for us to work with you. We are required to collect your current child support and something towards any support debt.

What will happen once I find a job?

When you have a child support obligation you are required to notify us each time you get a new job. If you contact us once you find employment we can work with you on the amount you pay each month towards your debt.

If you don't notify child support then when we send out the garnishment to your employer it may for up to half of your paycheck.

Call DCS and we will work with you!
